Dissertation

“Essays on Political Elite Networks” - (Working Title)
In this project, I broadly investigate how political elites form networks and the implications of these networks on the regime in question. In a theoretical paper, I show how individual actors respond to ideological and financial incentives when seeking allies. I also contribute to the empirical study of elite networks by making use of an unconventional graph database, Wikidata, that allows for the measurement of multiple layers of networks, dynamically, and across countries.

A Network Theory of Coalition Formation

Part of my dissertation, this paper models the political coalition formation process as formation of an elite network, where individuals are free to choose their support ties given everyone's exogenously given power and ideology. .

Buying Influence through Sovereign Wealth

This paper analyzes Sovereign Wealth Fund investment flows in comparison to other types of monetary flows, specifically FDI, to see whether political factors motivate SWF investments as opposed to economic gains.
